

Community-Led Housing: a Key Role for Local Authorities

In January 2018, the Housing Commission on Community-Led Housing published its report, 'Community-Led Housing: a Key Role for Local Authorities'. Set up by the Co-operative Councils' Innovation Network and led by Croydon Council, the Commission's practical approach is aimed at promoting good practice and innovation to enable councils to work with communities to generate more affordable housing and make best use of government funding for community-led housing (CLH).

12 detailed local authority case studies set out how and why a council is supporting CLH, who it is working with, and give examples of homes created in their area.

Authorities featured are from England, Wales and Scotland, and include urban and rural areas of both high and low housing demand:

- Brighton & Hove City Council
- Bristol City Council
- Carmarthenshire County Council
- Chichester District Council
- Cornwall Council
- East Cambridgeshire District Council
- Glasgow City Council
- Hull City Council
- Leeds City Council
- Lewisham Council
- Liverpool City Council
- Redditch Borough Council

Written from the local authorities' point of view, the report argues that CLH should be 'added to the strategic mix' to increase the supply of homes that local people can afford. Different solutions are required for different markets, but CLH can make a contribution, whether through new build homes, returning empty properties to use or introducing CLH into the management of existing homes.

The report provides an introduction to CLH and how it comes into being including funding available. It sets out how CLH can help local authorities achieve their strategic priorities and bring resources into the area, and gives examples of how authorities can enable or support it. It also provides sources of further guidance and contacts in local authorities.

A CLH Technical Toolkit for local government has been developed by the Housing Associations' Charitable Trust (HACT), which has been informed by the Commission's findings and case studies.

This resource will cover community engagement, planning, funding and legal issues and will provide templates and process maps for local government officers. It will be available from March 2018 at www.clhtoolkit.org
